Year 12 Psychology visited the Freud Museum in London. Students participated in an interesting and thought-provoking educational talk where lots of really great questions were asked about Freud's controversial theories on human development. Students were then free to look around the museum where they could see Freud's famous chair where his therapy sessions took place, as well as sit on a replica one that has just been used in the new Freud film starring Anthony Hopkins.

Year 10 Psychology students also visited the Twist Museum in London. Students are currently studying the topic of Perception, and this visit allowed students to gain some first-hand experiences with the visual illusions that they are learning about in lessons, including the famous Ames room.
